U.S. policy too closely tied to Gorbachev'

WASHINGTON (R) — U.S. Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell said Sunday that the United States had tied its Soviet policy too closely to the fate of President Mikhail Gorbachev. "Gorbachev is, of course, an historic figure. But there has been an enormous personalisation of American policy — almost to the degree that it's as though he's going 10 be there forever, which we know he is not," the Maine Democrat said in an interview oo U.S. television. Mitchell said ominous signs had emerged from the Soviet Union in the last few days, and said the possibility of a return to dictatorial rule seemed to be rising. Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze abruptly resigned on Thursday with an impassioned warning that "reactionaries" threatened the Soviet Union with dictatorship. Mitchell said the United States should continue to send substantial aid to Moscow "unless and until a crackdown occurs. But I don't think we should be providing any foreign assistance if there is a crackdown and a return to authoritarian rule." Referring to Gorbachev. Mitchell said: "I think we should be supportive; we certainly should be grateful for all he's done. But I think our policy ought not be as highly personal as it has been.

French minister cancels Saudi talks

Volume 15 Number 4581

PARIS (R) - Defence Minister Jean-Pierre Chevenement, visiting French forces in Saudi Arabia, cancelled a meeting with his Saudi counterpart Sunday after local authorities hanned two Christmas rock concerts for French troops, military sources said. "The minister's decision (to cancel the meeting) was not unrelated to the intransigence of the Saudi authorities," a senior military source said in Paris. Chevenement, who arrived in Riyadh on Sunday, was due to meet Saudi Defence Minister Prince Sultan Ben Abdul Aziz before spending Christmas with French forces whose strength is expected to reach 10,000 men soon. The French army said Saturday it had cancelled the concerts at the request of the Saudi authorities, but French military sources later said talks were under way aimed at reprieving one concert.

Germans advised against visit

BONN (R) - Germany warned its nationals on Sunday not to travel to any country bordering Iraq, noting the United Nations deadline of Jan. 15, after which force may be used to oust Iraq from Kuwait. A Foreign Ministry spokesman said travel agents had been instructed to draw clients' attention to the situation in the Middle East, "especially concerning Jan. 15." He said many Germans who live in Bahrain, Kuwait and Saudi Arahia came home for Christmas and were expected to stay.

Chad wants to try Habre

N'DJAMENA (R) — Chad is seeking the extradition of former President Hissene Hahre, who sought asylum in Senegal after fleeing his country four weeks on the capital. "The state council has begun moves to extradite former President Hissene Hahre from Dakar in Senegal in order to hring him to justice," govern-ment spokesman Mahamat Salem said. Chad's new government has said it will set up a special criminal court to try Habre, accused by human rights groups of ordering the torture and killing of hundreds of political prisoners during his nineyear rule.

Veteran Haaretz editor dies

TEL AVIV (AP) — Gershom Gustav Schocken, the veteran editor of the respected Israeli daily Haaretz and one of the country's most acclaimed journalists, has died of a prolonged illness. He was 78. Schocken died Saturday morning at Shiba hospital in Tel Aviv of what Haaretz described as a "malignant disease" diagnosed a year ago. Schocken was horn in September 1912 in Zwickau, Germany, and was the eldest son of Shlomo Salman Schocken, a husinessman and art collector who established the Schocken publishing houses.

Rich Arabs suffer

MUSCAT (AP) - Rich Gulf Arabs eat too much, say doctors fighting what they term "mal-nutrition of the affluent," the official English-language Observer reported Sunday. The daily quoted Health Department Preventive Medicine Director-General Ahmad Al Ghassani as saying "over-eating is becoming a real problem in Oman as in the rest of the Gulf. Malnutrition of the affluent is a condition caused hy a lifestyle in which rich and excessive food is consumed without attention to dietary needs. We have to tell people malnutrition, notwithstanding how it is caused, could lead to a host of serious diseases." Ghassani was addressing health service medical staff on a training course in the capital organised in collaboration with the World Health Organisation to help them identify and overcome nutritional problems. Malnutrition of the poor was the main concern in the Sultanate 20 years ago before oil revenues were used to end a century of lack of development and high mortality

U.S. risks friends, allies and interests in case of war in Gulf — Qasem

U.S. Congress vote on Gulf | U.S. forces on special possible as inquiry ends

U.S. Congress could soon face a politically perilous vote on whether to endorse President George Bush's policy on the Gulf as fears of a war there

A vote appearing to support a war could come back to haunt members if U.S. forces become bogged down in a costly military operation. A vote against could appear to undercut the troops and give Bush political ammunition if his policy succeeds.
House of Representatives

Speaker Thomas Foley said last week the president would have to take the initiative in seeking a resolution authorising force in the Gulf, where U.S.-led multinational forces are ranged against Iraq.

While an affirmative vote was likely it would not be overwhelming. Foley added.

Hearings before Senate and house committees ended on Thursday with former British Prime Minister Edward Heath testifying to the House Armed Services Committee.

Congressional leaders are beginning to look ahead to a possible January debate focusing on a resolution of support for Bush's policy. If it takes place, it is likely to be before the United Nations-imposed Jan. 15 deadline for Iraq to leave Kuwait. after which force can be used to eject Baghdad's troops.

Members are aware that such a debate would almost certainly produce political fallout.

Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell said events in the next few weeks, especially WASHINGTON (R) - The any U.S.-Iraqi talks on the crisis, would affect Senate action, because of the uncertainty he declined to predict the terms of a Senate debate.

In the six weeks since Bush announced plans to increase U.S. troop strength in the Gulf to about 400,000 for a possible offensive, critics, mostly opposition Democrats, have called for time to allow a U.N. economic blockade to work.

They have been backed by many of the expert witnesses at the congressional hearings most significantly Admiral William Crowe, who retired only last year as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Congress had planned to re-cess for much of January but because of the Gulf crisis the House is expected to stay technically in session and Mitchell says the Senate will not take a

The White House says Bush would like any congressional resolution on the crisis to mirror the U.N. resolution.

Although Bush's policy is the subject of sharp debate, Mitchell and six other senators who accompanied him on a recent trip to the Gulf muted their reservations last Thursday and were unanimous in supporting his goal of getting Irarq to pull out of Kuwait.

Many Democrats have said the decision to increase the American force strength changed U.S. policy from the announced "Desert Shield" to a 'desert sword." Some have accused him of putting the United States on a course to war.

But Senate Republican leader Robert Dole said last week the congressional hearings bad sent "dangerously misleading signals" about the U.S. stance on the crisis. Administration officials have voiced doubts that a sanctionsonly policy would force Iraqi withdrawal. They fear that trying sanctions for up to 18 months as suggested would risk fraying the international anti-Iraq coalition.

The administration and leading members of Congress are also at odds over the congressional role in sending U.S. troops into battle.

Dates answer to sugar shortages in Iraq

BAGHDAD (AP) - Dates may be the answer to shortages of sugar brought on by United Nations sanctions imposed against Iraq after its invasion of Kuwait.

Confectionaries are now making date-based sweets, like 'madgoga." instead of the traditional, richer sweets like "baklawa" and "min alsama" which require plenty of sugar, flour and fat to make.

Dates are the Iraqis' favourite winter fruit. But they have rarely tried to trun it into a dessert. The younger generations have heard about "madgoga" from their grandmothers, but a few have tasted the sweet.

Madgoga "is cheap and easy to make. I wonder why we had forgotten it and have only remembered our best traditional sweets in this bour of crisis, said Abdul Hussein Jawad. whose family is a well-known

Baghdad sweetmaker. Jawad said he makes "madgo ga" by adding sesame paste to ground dates. Something he adds nuts and coconuts to make it tastier and more nourishing.

Dates and milk constituted the staple diet of bedouin tribes in the desert, mainly because the fruit is rich in vitamins and milk contains the water necessary for rebydration.

Madgoga was rediscovered after sweets shops were forced to close in the wake of international sanctions that followed the Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait.

The embargo has forced the government to ration some food items; including cooking oil, flour, milk and sugar. These items bave disappeared from the market, but families receive limited quantities from government centres.

Iraq says that more than 2,000 children under five have died because of shortages in medicines and baby food that followed the U.N. embargo. Diplomats say there are no serious shortages in medicines.

Kuwait-based Palestinians allowed rights to sponsor DUBAI (AP) - Palestinians registered as residents of Kuwait, which Iraq calls its "19th province," have been given the right to sponsor foreign nationals who wish to remain in the emirate, travellers said Sunday. A number of Indians who fled Knwait through Dubai en route to India, who declined to be identified, said several thousand Indians have now acquired the new Iraqi documents that permit them to stay in Kuwait. Members of the large expatriate population that fills the labour gap in the oil-rich countries can only acquire residence permits if they are sponsored by local citizens, companies or government departments.

The Indian sources said the Palestinians bave been given the status of a "first class" resident with the right to sponsor other foreigners Until Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, the Palestinians themselves were under the sponsorship of Kuwaiti nationals. It was not clear from the accounts given by the returning Indians whether the Palestinians were charging fees for sponsorship. Under normal circumstances. as is the practice in other Gulf countries, foreigners apart from those directly employed by the sponsor have to pay an annual fee for the privilege.

After declaring Kuwait its 19th province, Baghdad issued new identity documents to the residents. In late October, Iraq announced that all foreign nationals bad to regularise their status by finding new sponsor and acquiring new identity papers by Nov. 20. The deadline was later extended to Dec. 5. Iraq annexed Kuwait six days after its Aug. 2 invasion of the country, which had some 100.000 Palestinians, the largest expatriate community out of total of about a million. The Palestinians in Kuwai according to accounts by several refugees, were split over the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, some critical hut the larger number supportive. The rest of the population an estimated 800,000 — were Kuwaitis of wbom nearly 500,000 either were away on summer holiday or fled their bomeland, leaving foreign nationals under their sponsorship stranded. As elsewhere, members of the foreign community who opted to leave Kuwait had to be issued exit visas. The bulk of the 110,000-strong Indian community who left acquired them.

But according to some evacuees there are still several thousand Indians and other foreigners who have opted to stay. Some have not been able to find sponsors among the Knwaitis who remain under occupation.

Iraqis convinced of their cause, will fight to the end — British MP

By P.V. Vivekanand Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN - Iraqis are convinced that they have a religious. historie mission to perform in the Gulf and are quite well prepared to fight a battle against all odds with the multinational forces assembled in the Guif. according to a senior opposition member of the British parlia-

Bernie Grant, a left-wing member of the British Labour Party, also believes that Jordan has been given a raw deal for its position towards the Gulf cri-

"Britain, which enjoyed traditionally close relations with Jordan, did not give enough credit and respect for Jordan's viewpoints and ideas over the Guif crisis," said Grant, who represents a group of 50 fellow Labour MPs seeking peace in the Gulf.

"I believe that Jordan was not treated fairly by our government, particularly when His Majesty King Hussein visited Britain in his quest for a paceful. negotiated settlement of the Gulf crisis," said Grant, who became the first black member of the British parliament when he won a seat for Tontenham, London, in 1987.

Grant, who spent five days in Iraq last week on a mission aimed first and foremos: a: "ohtsining firsthand information on the Iraqi position towards the Gulf crisis," said he was convinced that the Iraqi people would fight to the end in the event of a military conflict since they believe in what they are

"I have come off with a firm impression that the Iraqis staunchly believe that they have a religious, historic mission to perform and this explains the support that they extended to their government's decision to take over Kuwait," said Grant. He said he got his impression not only from the Iraqi leaders madman and a tyrant by the waiters, trade unionists and others," in Baghdad.

Grant, who is on his way to London after the visit to Iraq arranged by the British Afromotive of the U.S. in the Gulf region is to ensure that Iraq's military might is destroyed and Israel remains the only military power in the region.

"At first I believed that the Americans moves in the Gulf were aimed at ensuring the flow of oil to the West," said Grant, who chairs the Labour Campaign for Peace in the Gulf.

Now I am convinced that the Americans are not in the Gulf to protect their oil or restore the toppied regime of Kuwait," Grant told the Jordan Times in an interview in Amman. "They are there to destroy lrag's military power and make sure that Israel remains the only military power in the region to protect their oil interests."

'I don't believe that the Americans will launch an attack against Iraq immediately after Jan. 15," the deadline set by the garet) Thatcher." U.N. Security Council for Iraq to withdraw from Kuwait or face war, Grant said.

They will wait at least until Feb. 15 since they need that much time to assemble a force capable of not only attacking Iraq but also of occupying Iraq and installing a pro-American government there," added Grant, Grant, who took over the chairmanship of the group of 50 left-wing Labour MPs from Tonny Benn this month, said his mission to Iraq, where he met with Deputy Prime Minister Taha Yassin Ramadan and officials, was aimed at picking up from where Benn left off. According to Grant, the British people "are given a daily diet of how Saddam Hussein is a

he met but from the "dozens British media and are not really people, students, taxidrivers, awae of the facts of the matter involved in the Gulf crisis."

He said his group was planning a "massive protest rally" in London on Jan. 12 against war in the Gulf and expressed hope this Asian Solidarity Organisation, event "will reflect the anti-war also believes that the ulterior sentiments of the majority of the British people.

Grant argued that an opioion poll conducted in October which found that a majority of Britons support a war in the Gulf was "not really representative of the views of the British people."

If anything, he said, the views projected by the opinion poll were fed by the "biased reports that the British media have been giving to the British people."

That is why we believe this mission (to Iraq) is very important in that we will go back home and tell the truth about the situation to the British people," he added.

Grant believes that Prime Minister John Major, if left alone to work independently, will be able to steer an excellent diplomatic course away from the legacy he has inherited from (former Prime Minister Mar-

"Mr. Major has already shown that he is capable of following an independent policy on the domestic scene despite being a prisoner of the rightwing parliamentary group and the burden of Thatcherism," he

"He is trying to put a human face to Thatcherism, and I believe that if given a free hand he could be successful," he added.

Grant said he totally supported Iraq's Aug. 12 initiative calling for a linkage between the Gulf crisis and the rest of the problems of the Middle East, including the Palestinian issue. "After all, the Gulf crisis is only four months old but the Palestinian people have been waiting for 42 years for their land to be returned to them," he

Grant said the United States has no right to be an advocate of international legitimacy after what it did in Nicaragua, where ir rejected rulings of the International Court of Justice, and in Granada and Panama which it invaded."

According to Grant, "the reg-ime that the U.S. wants to restore to power in Kuwait is neither democratic nor representative of Kuwair's people.

"There goes the American argument of commitment to democracy," he said.

Grant believes that there is also a "silent majority" of the third world waiting in the wings, "closely watching the developments in the Gulf, admiriog lrag's courage to stand up to a superpower, but this majority is unable to do anything for fear of the U.S., particularly after the exit from the world scene of the Soviet Union as a superpower."

Grant warned that "hundreds of thousands of people in the Third World will face the prospect of starvation" and other economic difficulties in the event of war in the Gulf.

According to Mohammad Arif, secretary of the British Afro-Asian Solidarity Organisation, "less than one per cent the three-million strong Afro-Asian community in Britain support the government's approach to the Gulf crisis."

"For the rest, Saddam Hussein is a hero who has dared to challenge a superpower," said Arif, who accompanied Grant on the Gulf mission.

Grant was also highly critical of the leadership of the Labour Party, which has fallen in line behind the Conservative government's policy vis-a vis the Gulf

"They have also been making bellicose statements and portrayed a false image of a British society supporting a military op-tion in the Gulf," he said.

WITH BOTH Washington and Baghdad preparing for battle after the Jan. 15 U.N. deadline, Algerian President Chadli Benjedid persists in his journey for peace across Europe and North Africa. No doubt the Algerian leader is pinning some bope on last-minute European intervention to avoid war and destruction in the Gulf region. France and Italy have both said they would be willing to spearhead such an effort. After all, in addition to the peoples and countries of the Middle East the European peoples and countries would be the most directly affected by an outbreak of hostilities over the Kuwaiti crisis. The U.S. may think it can afford a war in the Gulf because it is not so dependent on Arab oil and the theatre of any such war is thousands of kilometres from continental America. But Europe cannot think of itself in those terms: It is much closer to the area and would be the first to pay for its consequences. It is common knowledge that, with the exception of Britain, the European Community is not always on the same wavelength as the White House on the crisis. There is a limit as to how far the EC nations would go to appease President George Bush's personal vendetta against Iraqi President Saddam Hussein. And here is where a joint Arab-European role can

On behalf of his president, the Algerian foreign minister, Sid Ahmad Ghozali, has proposed that the U.N. Security Council simply take a definitive stand on the need to resolve the Palestinian conflict, Such a clear-cut and unequivocal stance, he said, would untie the knot of the crisis and would unleash a wave of compromises from Iraq over the Kuwaiti case. Obviously Ghozali was making such an offer on the basis of information from the Iraqi president himself. With this in mind, an iron-clad position on the Palestinian problem is not a high price to pay in order to save all parties from a devastating war. Linkage or no linkage, a solemn pronouncement by the council's permanent members that a concerted effort will be able to settle the Palestinian question is not such an immoral position to take in any case, unless of course there is no political will on the part of the council's members to resolve the Arab-Israeli conflict. If it would please Bush and his secretaries of defence and state that such a bold commitment to deal head on with the Palestinian problem be coupled with a clarification that there is no formal linkage between the conflicts of the Middle East and the Gulf then so be it. No one wants to be so petty as to make an insurmountable issue of this point. What the Arab side, including Iraq, would insist on its separate but equal treatment of this part of the world. Would it not weigh heavily on the conscious of Washington to know that it could have avoided war by simply sending clearer signals that it intends to perform an hononrable and noble task in the Middle East but did not do so for a petty reason? Since the Algerian foreign minister's submission on a way out of the Gulf quagmire is part and parcel of the Algerian president's ongoing search for peace. Bush can be a bit more accommodating of Iraq's legitimate demands when what is asked of him is not a terrible price

the Middle East and to be serious about it.

anyway. All that is called for is a commitment to be fair in Al Ra'i Arabic daily Sunday echoed Foreign Minister Marwan Al Qasem's views about Security Council resolution 681 describing it as devoid of all meaning. Indeed, by issuing such resolution the Council failed to achieve anything; and in fact, the Council missed an opportunity that should have been seized to deal with the Palestine question more effectively to bring about peace to the region, said the paper. Israel for its part did not only refuse the resolution, but also displayed further defiance to the world community by scoffing at it and declaring that it does not change anything, the paper noted. It said that the Council's delay in taking any action, and its failure to force the Israelis to give np occupied territory and recongnise the rights of the Palestinian people served as an encouragement for Tel Aviv and world Zionism to pursue repressive actions and programmes to judaise the Arab areas. By failing to take proper measures to end Israel's crimes against the Palestinians the Council has thus proved its impotency and total failure to implement international legitimacy which it has been bragging about, the paper continued. The paper also pointed out that the Council's failure was largely due to Washington's pressures and influences which had been instrumental over the past months to rally the Council against Iraq and to secure a resolution for using force to evict Iraqi forces from Kuwait. This weak resolution which can only serve the Israelis, said the paper, should open the eyes of those Arabs who aligned themselves behind the Americans vis-a-vis Iraq, that Israel is intent on pursuing its ambitions regardless of the situation in the Gulf, benefiting from disunity and a disarray among Arab ranks.

A draft law on money changers in Jordan comes under discussion by columnist Salah Abdul Samad in Al Rai' daily Sunday. The draft which has been sent to Parliament for debate before it becomes law can by no means do justice to the money changers in Jordan because it tends to give monopoly in money changing business to a handful of the rich who will be operating legally and driving many others underground to deal in black market money changing operations, says the writer. Abdul Samad quotes a well known money changer Hani Al Saudi's memorandum sent to parliament in which he presents his criticism of the new law and points out the flaws in that law. According to the draft JD 500,000 will be required from each money changer to have as initial capital to start the business and will be asked to deposit 30 per cent of the capital with the central bank as reserve. This means that the money changing business will be the sole property of a few rich people who can afford such huge sums while the majority of others will be forced to deal with money changing in what is known as a black market, says the writer. These are some of the points referred to by Saudi in his memorandum to Parliament and which urgently should be discussed by the concerned committees before a law can be endorsed, the writer demands.

Iraq needs honourable exit

IT IS not sufficient to argue forcefully and vehemently against war in the Gulf without complementing the argument with a meaningful push for peace. Likewise it is certainly not enough to express appre-ciation and understanding for Iraq's position on the entire Gulf conflict without showing Baghdad an honourable way towards settlement. Iraq and its people need to extricate themselves from the Gulf quagmire in an honourable exit that would assure them continued strength and well-being. The Arab World has a vested interest in keeping Iraq strong. The Arabs should be helped by all those who profess love and affection lowards them to come out openly and clearly in support of a compromise solution that could keep Iraq intact and potent. In the long run. lraq's well-being is more relevant and important than Kuwait's per se, and its oil fields. There is a limit to how far Iraq should allow itself to go in pursue of its legitimate claims against Kuwait and its territory. It is clear that there is a point in this Iraqi endeavour beyond which the law of diminishing returns begins to operate on Baghdad as well.

Iraq, therefore, should be encouraged to make a bold gesture for peace over the Kuwaiti situation and its ramifications. It should be proded to take a giant leap in the direction of peace in the Gulf by suggesting that a compromise is not completely ruled out.

There are so many positive signals eminating from Baghdad suggesting a compromise is possible. but unfortunately they always get drowned by other confusing signals. Public relations is an important and integral part of diplomacy and Iraq needs to pay closer attention 10 i1.

To be sure Kuwait is part of the greater Arab bomeland and so is Iraq. As long as Kuwait is governed by an Arab regime that is faithful and true to Arab nationalism, it makes no difference and should make no difference whether Iraqi Arab nationalists or Kuwaiti Arab nationalists are the rulers of Kuwait. It is high time that all Arabs, true Arabs, go back to the basics and concentrate on the essentials rather than the form. If all Arab regimes are once again motivated by Arab nationalism and guided by the quest for one Arab homeland, structured in some form of confederation or another, one would not make too much of an issue over which brand of Arabs govern this or that part of the Arab homeland. Accordingly, what is even more relevant and pressing than Iraqi's legitimate claims on some parts of Kuwait and more urgent than securing for Iraq an outlet to the sea is the kind of legitimacy that is being contemplated for Kuwaii when the dust settles. Had Iraq made this point its main bone of contention rather than the mere physical control of Kuwait, per se, its position would have been much more understood and sympathised with. Besides it would bave been able to avoid going to the extreme of annexing Kuwait. As it is the Arab peoples are torn between two loyalties: one against occupation and annexation and the other in favour of Arabs becoming the true masters over their natural resources especially oil and urantum. And when Arab states start treating one another as brotherly countries, as they piously and cere-monially do in Arab summits, then a Kuwaiti outlet to the sea is and should be an Iraqi outlet to the sea as well. Vice versa, an Iraqi fresh water source is and should be a Kuwaiti source of sweet water. Had Kuwait and Iraq developed this kind of relationship over the years and established and nurtured a genuine Arab neighbourly re-lations, the whole Gulf crisis would not have arised in the frist place.

Yet, other Arab nationalists would warn that foreign countries, especially those with a vested interest in Arab oil would never want good Arab neighbourly relations to flourish or take root in the Arab World for fear that that would jeopardise those foreign powers' national interests. In fact this has always been the concern and worry of Arab nationalists. To deal with this issue effectively and permanently, one needs to promote democratic regimes throughout the Arab World. The most assured way to bring back legitimacy to Kuwait and elsewhere in the Arab World for that matter is to reestablish democratic systems of government there and elsewhere. Iraq has nothing to fear from a democratic Kuwaiti regime and should make this quest its primary objective rather than territory or oil. The Iraqi leadership should be encouraged to give priority to this goal. The Iraqi leadership can easily make a declaration to the effect that its government is willing to entertain withdrawal from Kuwait, as French President Francois Mitterrand had suggested a few months ago in a speech to the U.N. General Assembly, on condition that foreign military presence is totally and effectively terminated in the Gulf and a genuine nationalist Arab regime in Kuwait, free of foreign hegemony, is established. These objectives are now more urgent and relevant than the Rumeila oil field and the two small islands off the coast of Kuwait. At least this way, Iraq's priorities would be more wisely articulated and comprehended. Iraq's true friends are duty bound to promote such Iraqi thinking. This way Bagh-dad can effectively frustrate the conspiracy against its might as a regional power to reckon with.

Edward Heath: War with Iraq is a nightmare, even and especially if West wins

THE real nightmare for the coalition forces in the Gulf would be to win a war against Iraq, says Edward Heath. American and Enropean soldiers would then have to occupy a devastated and hostile country and the Arab Nation would be sure to turn against them. On the other hand, what Americans bave called "the nightmare scenario" — an Iraqi withdrawal to a small part of northern Kuwait - could provide the prospect of a lasting settlement, believes Mr. Heath. It is not too late for such a withdrawal to be obtained by negotiation and for guarantees to be provided by the Arab League, if the United States and Iraq can agree on a date to talk. he says.

"A lot more flexibility is needed over dates to get things started. The Jan. 15 is the date after which the United Nations countries are permitted to take military action. It is permissive, not mandatory. Choosing a date close to then is not in any way impeding military action, which in any case is going to take some time to organise.

"I am sure that Saddam Hussein realises this because be is extremely well informed. I found that when I met him. The people who say that he is completed isolated are talking nonsense. You can't isolate anybody in the modern world.

The Iragis have defences that go considerable distances back into Iraq. This means that while our people are attacking they are open to the Iraqi weapons and great damage will be done. I am advised by oil experts outside of Iraq that President Saddam has already deep-mined the Kuwaiti oil wells and by pressing a button they can all go up in flames. It will be the biggest fire the world has ever known. They estimate that the temperature in Knwait will go as high as 60°C, and with the prevailing wind it would make it impossible for the Sandis to work their wells for the simple reason that people could not withstand the temperatures. Once the Knwaiti wells are ablaze, the experts tell me, it is very difficult to get all that under control.

"In addition, Saddam Hussein has long-distance weapons that he can use against Saudi Arabia at strategic points. If this hap-pens, then the world will lose between 40 and 50 per cent of its oil supplies and it's going to take years to get it back again. The consequences for the world economy would be that much of the industry of the Western world would grind to a halt.

"It will be the third world war because of the number of countries involved. They cover the whole world. Once it starts you can't tell what the consequences will be. There has been a great ecclesiastical argument over whether war is justified. One school of thought is that a li-mited war is justified. But that is not valid because you can't limit a war today."

"What would we be fighting this war for? That is the question many Americans are asking, but here it has not been asked with any force at all. The answer, first of all, is the United Nations. One can understand that the Iragis are cynical about this. They say the Russians went into Afghanistan and nothing effective happened. There have been so many other cases that the Arabs can cite where the U.N. has taken no military action. When the Americans bombed Libya nothing was done. When they went into Panama the U.N. did nothing. And the Israelis constantly - the U.N. did no-

"So why is the U.N. taking action this time? You can explain to them that it's because the cold war has finished and so you haven't got the balance that existed over the Gulf for so long. It will be ironic if the ending of the cold war leads to war in the Gulf with all the appalling consequences. The first resolution of the U.N., Resolution 660, had three operative paragraphs. The second called upon Iraq to withdraw immediately and unconditionally from Kuwait. The third called upon Iraq and Kuwant to resolve their differences immediately. The word immediately in both clauses meant they were to be simul-taneous, but this has been forgotten. In speeches, the British prime ministers have never mentioned that these differences have to be resolved. We hear that Saddam Hussein has to get out and that's that,

"One of the differences between Iraq and Kuwait is the question of the boundaries that were fixed in 1961. I negotiated them when I was Lord Privy Seal at the Foreign Office. I know all the rulers in the Gulf. The argument from the Iraqi side is that during the war with Iran the Kuwaitis moved the border forward some 30 to 40 miles nearer to Iraq. I don't now if that is correct or not but it ought to be settled by discussions, if necessary with an intermediary. It doesn't justify a war.

The next argument is that, as a result of this extension of the boundary, the oil beneath has been sipboned off by Kuwait. This, too, ought to be settled by discussion. Then there is the problem of the islands, which will cover Iraq's entrance to the Gulf. Again, this ought to be a matter of resolving differences as in U.N. Resolution 660.

If the Iraqis withdraw to the boundaries of Knwait what guarantee is there that the Americans and the British will not go into Kuwait and then be in a better position to attack Iraq? The prime minister has said that if the Iragis withdrew. then we would not go in, but that won't be enough for Saddam Hussein simply because be doesn't trust the British or the Americans an inch. His reply would be what happens if the Emir of Kuwait asks the coalition to go back in? Will you refuse his request? You didn't last time, so why should I accept that you will refuse his request next time? What is your guarantee worth? The answer to all this, I think, is that the Arab League has to come in and provide a buffer force to reassure both sides that the rest of these countries are not going to attack him even when be has made changes in Kuwait. That goes back to the situation in 1961-62 when the Arab League did come in and I believe that they would be prepared to do that again.

"These things bave to be sorted out. You can't just say: Get out of Kuwait" and that is the end of the matter. If we can get into the position where President Saddam can resolve his differences with Kuwait so it is no longer necessary for his forces to be there, and can add to it that there is going to be a determined attempt to deal with the Palestinian question, then I think the Iraqi leader's position will be secure.

"If Ceorge Bush can say he has organised things so that Sad-dam Hussein has withdrawn and he can bring all his forces home because there is going to be a conference to deal with Palestine and Israel, I think that would satisfy American opinion. President Bush would have to adjust his requirement for Saddam Hussein to withdraw from the whole of Kuwait, but then be has the third paragraph of Resolution 660 on which to do that. So far it has suited them to forget about paragraph three and just talk about paragraph two. But if one is determined to settle things without a war, these resolutions can be used.

Since the oil hike of 1973 the Middle East has become a highly developed area of the world. Their leaders are highly educated and their populations greatly internationalised. Some Western leaders have not caught up with that and are treating them like a very inferior group in the world.

"I am convinced that the final arrangements of a settlement will have to be made by the Arabs themselves. First of all because the Arabs used to dealing with situations of this kind. If we try to impose a solution I don't think the Arabs will accept

"If there was an American withdrawal I don't think it likely that Iraq would attack Saudi Arabia because President Saddam now realises the forces that can be mustered against him, in addition to the forces the Saudis themselves have. And if the Arab League was to negotiate the final arrangement and act as some sort of buffer force that danger is greatly reduced."

"If the Armed Services Committee ask for my opinion of Saddam Hussein I shall endeavour to give it. I notice people have stopped calling him mad. This was all part of the buildup at the beginning. He is not mad in the least. He's a very astate person, a clever person. He made a misjudgment about Kuwait and I am sure that he recognised now that it was a during the three hours I talked to him, never once raised his

"My judgment is that if the main problem is resolved the so-called nightmare scenario would be acceptable to the American government, but this is again where the question of the Arabs finally sorting it out among themselves comes in. It became public knowledge in a big way that Prince Sultan, defence minister of Saudi Arabia, said to his Kuwaiti friends that they should not be ashamed of making boundary changes where it was proved to be justifiable. That was a very clear indication to the Kuwaitis that the Saudis would accept that - in fact advised it.

Prince Sultan is a powerful man. He commands all the Saudi forces. If the Arabs themselves are able to say that this is their agreement then President Bush is in the clear.

"Quite a section of the British press is warlike and that has led to leading articles day after day actually demanding we have a war. Those people can't have any conception of what war is like. They point quite rightly that President Saddam used chemical weapons in Iran and also against the Kurds, but they show no appreciation of what that involves, particularly when used on a massive scale against an invading force. These things ought to be discussed more in the press.

"There is no valid comparison between the situation in the Gulf and that in Europe at the start of the World War II. Talk of appeasement completely misrepresents the situation. We have shown that we can deploy our forces in Gulf and are in a position to act if the worst comes to the worst. That was not the case in the Thirties when we faced Germany. I have noticed that they have stopped calling Saddam Hussein a Hitler. He hasn't got Hitler's industrial or power base. Far from conquering country after country, he has made a settlement with Iran, which they wanted.

"I don't believe that he is misjudgment. He was very calming trying to conquer the whole of during the three hours I talked the Middle East. I fully understand anyone who wants to pre-vent the expanding of countries but it was this that got us into so many difficulties Over the Suez Canal. I know that Anthony Eden was absolutely genuine in thinking that this was a repeti-tion of what had happened in the Thirties. Then, we had similar accusations: that Nasser was a Hitler and he was so stupid he could never operate the canal. We were wrong on that. It is the same when we try to discredit President Saddam. It is very wrong. It is unjustifiable. More tension was created when Mrs. Thatcher started talking about reparations and war crimes. You can only have reparations and war crimes if you invade the whole country and succeed in capturing the leaders. That raised enormous suspicions that Britain and America wanted a war, or would have to have a war in order to deal with alleged war crimes and get reparations. "I expect that the military objective of a war would be to destroy Iraq. A war is bound to extend into Iraqi territory. If Iraq was conquered then there would have to be an occupation and we should then find the whole of the Arab World against us. It would be a nightmare, it would create a political situation much worse than what we have already. Yes, the nightmare scenario would be to win a war against Iraq. Nightmare after nightmare." (The Independent).

'The middle is a dangerous place to be'

By Michael Putzel The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - U.S. officials are worried that the departure of Eduard A. Shevardnadze as Soviet foreign minister will slow progress in U.S.-Soviet relations and perhaps trigger further disintegration of the central government in Moscow.

This is not a very nice Christmas present from Moscow," said one senior U.S. official who emerged last week from meetings at the State Department to discuss Shevardnadze's resignation, which sent shock waves through Moscow and Western capitals alike.

Despite public reasurances that the resignation won't change the course of superpower relations, there is private consternation among leading official analysts and more open concern expressed by experts outside the

John D. Steinbruner, a Soviet specialist and director of foreign policy studies at the Brookings Institution, a private research group, called the move "a severe polarisation of the Soviet domestic situation."

Communist bardliners are pushing Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev to get tough with nationalists and radical reformers they accuse of trying to split the union. The Soviet president has threatened to use the KGB and police to restore order in the increasingly unstable environment aggravated by widespread food shortages and a breakdown in supply lines.

"You've got the radical intellectuals and nationalists on one side arguing sovereignty, and some conservatives arguing traditional crackdown, with Gorbachev there in the middle trying to preserve the union on reasonable terms." Steinbruner said.

"The middle is a dangerous place to be, and Shevardnadze is one of the few figures who can bring serious political credibility to that middle position."

If the foreign minister's resignation "proves to be an indica-tion that this middle position is not viable, then that is an alarming sign," the Brookings scholar

A leading official analyst of Soviet and East European affairs, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said there is concern that this is going to add momentum to the disintegrative forces, a sign that they've now hit the central government and the government's basically just going to fall apart." Shevardnadze was a party boss in his native Georgia and a neophyte in foreign affairs only six years ago. But be took a commanding position on the world stage by stircking tradi-tional Soviet disology and negotisting tactics in search of a new role as a dealmaker and an applicant for Soviet membership in the world community of na-

His informal, personable style won the confidence of his likeminded U.S. counterpart, Secretary of State James A. Baker who said Thursday, "I am proud to call this man a friend." It will be difficult for any ccessor to regain that level of credibility and confidence. The State Department source said U.S. officials had been tipped by the Soviets that Yevgeny Primakov, a Gorbachev adviser and foreign policy emissary, was in line to replace Shevardnadze if he were named prime minister or vice president in Gorbachev's promised government reorganisation.

Before Gorbachev brought him into the Kremlin, Primakov was director of one of several Soviet academic institutes on international affairs and specialised in the Arab World. He has made numerous visits to the United

"He doesn't like Americanshe never has and our judgment is he's not as intelligent," one State Department official said. "He doesn't have the intellectual depth that Shevardnadze had, despite his academic credentials. He'll be a more difficult man to deal with."

The official acknowledged that the same might be said of practically anyone in Gorbachev's inner circle. Shevardnadze, perhaps even more than Gorbachev himself, was admired by his U.S. counterparts for his candid statements about past Soviet mistakes and his willingness to bargain for the sake of winning agreements on tough arms control issues.

"Shevardnadze had flexibility and enjoyed Gorbachev's confidence and felt able to improvise on the spot sometimes to solve problems," the analyst said, noting those are rare qualities in the history of Soviet foreign policy

Primakov, the source added, "much more cautious and ponderous, a more bureaucratic figure" than Shevardnadze. Steinbruner disputed the contention that Primakov is anti-America, but he acknowledged that no one in the Soviet hierarchy has Shevardnadze's credibility with Western leaders. Ilya Prizel, a Soviet affairs salist at the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies, took a more pessimistic view.

He suggested Gorbachev is following the course taken by the late Nikita S. Khrushches who, in the 1960s, said be faced a choice between reform and giving up his power base. Khrushchev chose to cement has power, Prizel said. The Soviet leader eventually was overthrown in a palace coup carried out by his fellow Conmunist Party chieftains.

"It's a very depressing thing."
Prizel said, citing a series of reformist Gorbachev aides and advisers who have left or been sidelined in recent months. "Gorbachev has outlived his ability to reform."

A war between bosses General told the truth, and employees in Tunisia but served other purposes

By Jonathan Wright Reuter

TUNIS - Tunisian management and labour are squaring off for a fight over the country's 25-year-old labour laws, with the government caught in the middle as a reluctant and possibly biased referee.

The bosses say the legislation, passed in 1966 in the heyday of Tunisian socialism, is out of step with the harsh realities of the 1990s when companies face much sharper choices between competitiveness and hankruptcy.

Labour unions say they will never sign away workers's rights. They accuse managements of laying the gronndwork for thousands of redundancies among loyal staff and being prepared to replace them with new workers held in check by shortterm contracts.

The government says the labour laws are not inviolate. But, out of apparent fear of being seen to be moving too far too fast, it has not revealed amendments of its own to be debated alongside the employers' proposals.

The Businessmen's Federation, the UTICA, wants the legislation to define the concept of unjust dismissal more carefully, to widen the scope of what the law calls "grave professional faults" and to limit strictly the amount of compensation labour tribunals can award dismissed

Another demand is for "flexihility of labour," a code word for formal recognition of management's right to take on workers for short periods to meet

UTICA President Hedi Jilani said in a recent interview: "The fact is that abuses, the irres-(workers) has hardened the attitude of managers, who demand that everyone should share the risk, both employer and employee."

Anyone who wants to work need not feel concerned. It's only the workshy who need laws to protect them. I can't understand why people keep repeating the old talk about the rights of workers without mentioning their duties," he added.

Ridha Azzabi, a member of the UTICA executive burean, said some Tunisians seemed to think their salaries had nothing to do with working and preferred to play cards during work

But Ismail Sahbani, president of the Trade Union Movement, UGTT, told a meeting of 500 union officials in mid-December that the calls for reform were unjustified.

The draft we have seen is a great step hackwards. We are ready for dialogue but we will reject any erosion of the gains of the workers," he told the UGTT National Council.

The bosses were exploiting the victory of capitalism in Eastern Europe to win concessions from Tunisian workers and their plan would create fear and instability and widen the gap between rich and poor, he said to cheers from delegates. UGTT Spokesman Mohammad Trabelsi said management was seeking to make the workers the only scapegoats for low pro-ductivity in Tunisian industry, when in fact there were many

WASHINGTON - Army Lt.-Gen. Calvin A.H. Waller was stating the simple truth when he said be will still be short of troops to start an offensive ground war against Iraq on Jan. 15, some former military leaders

Bnt Waller, deputy commander of the U.S. military forces in the operation Desert Shield buildup, may have served other purposes as well. One former government official says Waller may have been underscoring the military's deep misgivings about taking on an entrenched Iraqi army in Kuwait. In its eight-year war against Iran, Iraq largely stayed on the defensive and mowed down charging Iranians.

And the view was expressed in Washington that Waller relieved some of the pressure on President George Bush to act against Iraq if it hasn't withdrawn from Kuwait by the Jan. 15 deadline set hy the United Nations. The U.N. resolution says military action may be taken if the deadline is not met.

Bush has created expectations by stressing that Iraq must "fulwithdraw by the U.N. deadline. Now Waller says it would be prudent to wait a month or

Odom is a former army chief of staff for intelligence who headed the intelligence-gathering national security agency during Ronald Reagan's presidency. Lawrence J. Korb, assistant secretary of defence for manpower in the Reagan administration said Waller, a former military assistant: "I think he was just telling the truth."

Robert Hnnter, who was director of Middle East affairs on the national security council under Reagan, said Waller's remarks also may have reflected the military's misgivings about getting involved in what is bound to be a costly war.

And retired Army Col. Harry G. Summers, a fellow at the army war college, said Waller's comment made U.N. intentions all the more uncertain for Iraqi President Saddam Hussein. "It clouds the issue and it should be cloudy," he said.

Waller last week said that if Bush wanted to attack Iraq after president, Defence Secretary Dick Cheney and Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, "that until our full complement of forces are on the ground that we should not initiate hostile activities."

Even though Cheney said much the same thing, although less forcefully, the statement appeared to undercut Bush's strategy of steadily increasing pressure on Saddam.

White House Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater sought to brush it off Thursday, saying: "It never hurts to build in a little uncertainty about what our intentions are as it relates to Jan. 15."

"I never expected anybody togo to war in Jan. 16th," said Jack N. Merritt, a retired four-star general. "What I heard was a guy out in the field... whose subjective judgment was that he didn't think he had enough force to do what he was supposed to Oasem underlined the irony that the Middle East is sliding towards war at a time when international detente has taken roots.

"Since we are living at a threshold of a new world order we would have hoped that this new world order would overflow to this part of the world," he said. Jordan was also optimistic that the "new world order" would herald peace and justice, fairness and evenhandedness and a sense of total commitment without selectivity to international legitimacy," he added.

Notwithstanding the language or the operative contents of United Nations resolutions, Qasem said, there cannot be any denial of the "organic link" between the Gulf crisis and the Palestinian problem. Liverpool offers few festive gifts for rivals day scrooge with boots on, Liverpool are threatening to offer the rest of English soccer little to celebrate ovet the traditionally busy Christmas holiday period.

Fout matches in less than 10 days test the endurance of players and supporters alike but Liverpool, who kicked off with a useful 3-2 win over Southampton Saturday, have always preferred to leave scasonal goodwill until after their final game in May.

Kenny Dalglish's side, seven points clear of Arsenal before the London club's match with Aston Villa Sunday, know the title race could be wrapped up almost before the decorations come down

Both Arsenal, whose captain Tony Adams was this week sentenced to four months in prison for drunk-driving, and Tot-tenham, who had two players sent off in their 2-1 win over Luton, are under ptessure on and off the pitch.

The only other likely challengers, Crystal Palace and Leeds. are generally agreed to be short of the highest calibre which leaves the Anfield team well in control of their own destiny.

Tunisian olive oil output may rise to 1975 level

TUNIS (R) — Tunisia expects olive oil production in the current 1990-91 season to be 165,000 tonnes, the highest for 15 years and 50 per cent higher than 110,000 tonnes in 1989-90, the State Marketing The country expects to export 70,000 tonnes, compared with about 50,000 in the previous season, it said. Tunisia is the second larges exporter in the world after Spain. The European Community huys 46,000 tonnes of Tunisian olive oil year under an agreement renewed earlier this year. Domestic consumption is about 40,000 tonnes a year so much of this season's production wil have to be stockpiled.

The ministry of agriculture has raised producer prices for the season which opened on Nov. 1 hy between 2.2 and 2.3 per cent, way below inflation at more than six per cent.

The producer price for the highest quality of oil has gone up to 1.75 dinars ($2.12) a kilogramme from 1.71 dinars ($2.08) and for the lowest grade to 1.39 dinars ($1.69) from 1.36 dinars ($1.65).

IŞLAMABAD (R) — The Asian Development Bank (ADB) may provide emergency aid to Pakistan to help offset the crippling impact of the Gulf crisis on the nation's economy, an ADB official has said.

Official at the Manila headquarters of the bank are considering a Pakistani government request for loans to rescue the country's deteriorating halance of payments, the official told

The assistance is likely to total between $100 to $200 million, he said. "Some balance of payments support is being considered with some stipulations, the official added.

Islamabad, the second largest recipient of ADB assistance, estimates the Gulf crisis will cost it more than $2 hillion over a year due to additional oil costs and the loss of trade and remittances from Pakistani workers who have fled the Gulf.

Its foreign exchange reserves were at a dangerously low level of 1.30 hillion rupees ($59 million), enough to cover only three days of imports, at the end of November.

Kuwaiti Ambassador Qasim Omar Al Yagout said recently his government. Saudi Arahia and the United Arah Emirates would probably lend Pakistan $500 million to bolster its reserves. No agreement has been

Reforming East Europeans face increased pressure, OECD says

PARIS (R) — The short-term outlook is bleak for East European countries trying under immense social and financial pressures to switch to market economies, the OECD has said.

Eastern Europe is one of the areas worst hit by the rise in oil prices following Iraq's takeover of Kuwait, the economic forum of 24 industrial nations said in its half-yearly outlook.

"The slowdown in the world economy, the rise in interest rates and, in particular, higher oil prices make for a more difficult economic environment in which to pursue the sort of restructuring on which these countries are now embarked," the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) said.

Several East European countries have begun reforms, cutting budget deficits, restoring monetary control, raising efficiency bloc Comecon, which will intro-through prices, and lideralising duce trade at world prices in East European exports. control, raising

"Nonetheless, it is clear that effective transformation is very much a medium-term process. Output declined in all these countries in 1990 and is likely, at best, to stabilise in 1991, while to a deterioration in eastern inflation remains a widespread Europe's overall trade balance of problem," the OECD said.

Output fell in 1990 by as much said. as 15 to 20 per cent in Poland of more that and Romania, but only by one OECD said. per cent in Czechoslovakia, where the pace of reform has been slower, it said.

In the Soviet Union reforms have not yet been agreed, let alone implemented. Output is falling and inflation is accelerating. A fall in oil production is offsetting the benefits of higher oil prices for Moscow.

The trade balance of eastern Enrope, excluding the Soviet Union, will be hit by changes hard currency instead of barters involving subsidised Soviet energy and raw materials for East European manufactured goods. The impact of these factors, with the rise in oil prices, will lead more than $9 hillion, the OECD of more than $9 billion, the Soviet subsidies on East European energy imports alone were worth some $3.5 billion in 1988. The impact on individual East European countries of these changes ranges from four per cent of Bulgaria's gross national product (GNP), to less than one per cent for Poland, a sizeable domesne goal producer, the OECD said.

fail to endorse U.N. plan

PARIS (R) — Cambodia's four warring factions Sunday failed to endorse an ambitious U.N. peace plan but there were signs of bope in their agreement to talk again and an apparent softening in the stance of the Pbnom Penh government.

"We have advanced on the path which should lead to a return to peace in Cambodia," French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas told a news conference held with his Indonesian counterpart, Ali Alatas, at the end of two days of tough talks in Paris.

The factions heard repeated warnings that the world's patience was wearing thin over their failure to stop squabbling and endorse the U.N. plan to end more than a decade of civil war in Cambodia.

The plan calls for U.N. admiistrators and peacekeeping troops to oversee a ceasefire and Britain, one of five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council which drafted the plan, made official contact with Phnom Penh Saturday for the first ome since 1979 to urge it to endorse the scheme.

A senior Foreign Office official flew to Paris to deliver the warning to the Vietnamesebacked government of Prime Minsiter Hun Sen.

"I told them this offer may not be an offer much longer from the international community," the envoy, David Colvin, head of the Foreign Office's South East Asia Department.

"If they are perceived as shooong this down their isola-tion will cononue," he added.

Hun Sen's administration has lacked internacional recognition since it was installed by Vietnamese troops invading Cambodia 12 years ago.

The three guerrilla movements bave already announced their acceptance of the U.N.

Britain's tough statement followed similar warnings from France and Indonesia, the cochairmen of the talks this weekend aimed at winning endorsement of the U.N. peace plan.

"The world is changing rapidly, the world is caught io turmoil," Alatas told reporters. There will be other questions that will demand our attention." he warned in an apparent refer-Soviet Union.

Colvin said Britain wanted Phnom Penh and its three foes to reach full agreement on the U.N. plan next month.

Dumas said he hoped to recoovene a 19-nation Paris peace conference on Cambodia in the first quarter of 1991 to give the plan a final go-ahead.

French Communist Party reelects Marchais as leader

SAINT-OUEN, France (AP) -Georges Marchais was overwbelmingly reelected secretarygeneral of France's Communist. Party, prevailing over vigorous dissension in party ranks.

The five-day congress in this working-class suburb north of Paris was the party's first since the dramatic collapse of Communist regimes in Eastern Europe.

Marchais' reelection, in which he received 99 per cent of the delegates' votes, effectively quashed calls for major overhauls of his policies.

Party congresses are beld every three years and are the highest forum for setting party policy. This year's meeting came on ty's founding and at a time when Marchais was facing increased calls for reform.

The Cummunists hold 26 of the 557 seats in the National Assembly, down from 35 in 1986 and 44 in 1988.

France claims war reparation from Germany

BERLIN (AP) - France is Nazi Germany. asking Germany for reparations from World War II, a newspaper has reported.

An official confirmed the report, and said the October unification of the two Germanys gives the united country the burden of war damaged that East Germany balked at paying, and other obligations of the nowdefunct Communist country.

In Paris, an aothorised source who would not be further identified also confirmed discussions were under way but stressed that they involved claims from prience to the Gulf and chaos in the vale citizens, not French governmental claims.

Die Welt newspaper quoted reliable sources saying French diplomats had spoken several times with the Foreign Ministry in Bonn about the issue and the French embassy there had sent two notes to the ministry. A ministry spokesman, who refused to be identified by name, said the issue was a "normal occurrence after unification, about which there must be negotiations," France had previously been in contact with East Germany about reparations, he said, without giving details.

The Die Welt report said currencies of 1945: 37.6 billion

Asked how the claims would be converted into today's money, the spokesman said it was a technical question for oegotiators.

In the West German currency reform of 1948, 10 reichsmarks were cooverted to 1 mark. At that rate, the German currency part of the French claim would be set at 26.1 billion marks, today worth about $17 billion. The French currency also has been reformed since the war data oo its conversion were not available.

The spokesman said there would be talks early next year about the issue.

After the war the big four allies - the Uoited States. France, Britain and the Soviet Union - assessed reparations against Germany to be paid io assets and capital goods. But Germany was economically prostrate and collection of reparations was uneven.

In the mid-1980s West-Germany agreed to pay damages to some French people who did forced labour or were drafted into the Germany military.

Germany is paying reparations to Israel and individual France had put its claim in the Jews. That sum so far has totalld about 80 billion marks, about French francs and 261 billion $53 billion at today's exchange reichsmarks, the currency of rates.

Shelves in food stores usually are empty. Bulgaria stopped making payments months ago on a foreign debt of more than $10 billion and is strapped for cash to import energy.

Where food is concerned, she said, there is no difference between Ceausescu and President lon lliescu, who was elected in May. Iliescu is under increasing pressure to resign, in part because of the dismal economic picture.

Many basic items of clothing are unavailable and others are too expensive, said Mrs. Kis, who earns 2.800 lei ($80) a month. She said shoes that cost 350 lei a year ago now sell for 1,500 lei, if they can be found at the official price.

Even on the black market, you can't get what you want much of the time, and things are three times as expensive as in state spops," she said.

Homes are warm in Giroc. Mrs. Kis said, but the people worry about a fuel shortage. In the nearby village of Carpinis, nothing but piles of coal dust remain in the fuel depot.

"Only those who know the right people stay warm and fed," said Magdalena Wambach, the village teacher. "It's just like newspaper to capitalise on he under Ceausescu workers in Valencia shut down early and residents of a Madrid suburb flocked into the streets to celebrate winning part of a $1.1 billion Christmas lottery billed as the world's richest. They were among the lucky Spaniards who shared "El Gordo" (the fat oos). the top prize that paid 250 mil-lion pesetas ($2.63 million) to each of 90 tickets bearing the number 32522. Since each of the 90 tickets cost 25,000 pesetas ($263), most were split among families, friends; club members and co-workers. Ooce somebody buys a ticket, he or she can divide it into as many shares as he wants by simply signing a piece of paper. El Gordo rained new wealth on residents of cities and towns in Madrid, Chenca and Valeocia. But thousands more Spaniards won other substantial prizes in the annual drawing. About 10 billion pesetas ($105 million) were spread around the lower-middle-class suburb of Alcorcon. 55 kilometres southwest of the capital. Police said extra units had been called to control traffic as winners began a street party near the outlet which sold the tickets. "You can imagine what it's like with everyone in the street," said a municipal policy man. "Since the prize was well distributed, practically every ball."

(AP) — A woman was arrested for giving her 2-year-old dangiter cocaine on at least two occasions. Police said they found Maryland Brown's daughter under the influence of cocaine Wednesday when they showed up at Brown's home to arrest her for allegedly giving it to the girl before. Ms. Brown, 22, was charged with two counts of firstdegree reckless endangering and two counts of delivering cocama. The girl was hospitalised, but officials declined to give her name or condition. The inveltigation had begun last week when the girl was treated at a hospital for cocaine withdrawal, pobce Sgt. Martin P. Hageman said. Ivory L. Johnson, director of the state division of Child Protective Services, said the child was released from the hospital into a relative's custody while police investigated her mother. "Detectives obtained enough evidence to arrest her and upon returning to the suspect's home, discovered the child had been returned to the mother," Hageman said. murderer lost a libel suit against a British newspaper that said she had an affair with a Greek who looked like her husband. The high court in London ordered Sonia Sutcliffe to pay the News Of The World £300,000 ($570,000) in court costs, nearly crasing her gains from a string of successful law suits against the Brigish press. The jury verdict was Sutcliffe's first loss in seven years of court battles, Sutcliffe. whose husband Peter was jailed for life in 1981 for murdering 13 women in Yorkshire, won about £334,000 ($635,000) in libel damages from previous cases. In a December 1988 article, this News Of The World said Sutcliffe, 40, had a "sizzling" affair in Greece with Greek holiday conf pany chief but kept her marriage a secret. 'I feel sick. I've been kissing and caressing the wife of a monster," it quoted the Greek, George Papoutsis, as saying. Sutcliffe, legally separated but not divorced from her husband, denied having an affair with the handsome, bearded Greek during the May 1988 trip. In the most celebrated of her previous libel actions, the former teacher won a record £600,000 ($1.14 million) from the British satirical magazine Private Eye. The sward prompted calls for are assessed. The magazing appealed and the damages were reduced to £60,000 ($114,000). Private Eye had accused Sutclife fe of trying to sell her story to
